Quality Air Reflects Quality of Work

People spend approximately 90% of their time indoors — summer and winter. According to the EPA, $100 million dollars a year is lost due to low productivity and absenteeism of workers. 50% is caused by respiratory problems.

As someone who is in charge at your facility, it may be your responsibility to provide conditioned air to the occupied spaces within the building. You try to keep it fresh with filtration systems that clean the current air within the space and by drawing in air from the outside. Unfortunately, many of the filters commonly used today will not prevent small particles of dust and debris from entering into the space. Contaminants not only include dust, but also fungi, mold and bacteria. Remember, not only are the occupants breathing this in, but if you are in the same building, it affects you as well.

Changing the filters and conducting your own routine cleaning helps, but taking the extra step needed with a prescheduled maintenance program will improve your system operation and efficiency. ACSI can provide the additional services and improvements such as:

- Chemically cleaning the indoor cooling coil (with environmentally safe products), drain pan, and condensate piping to remove mold and bacteria
- Chemically clean and/or power wash the outdoor condensing coils (even though they may look clean, the cotton wood and dirt hides in between the aluminum fins.)
- Clean coils, improve air flow and circulation
- Significantly reduce the amount of complaints of health and comfort by occupants
- Air conditioning systems perform more efficiently saving you energy and money
- Mechanical components will last longer reducing service and parts
